HomeLogic Receives Two Industry Awards

Marblehead, MA - October 19, 2004: HomeLogic, LLC announced it has been recognized with two key industry awards for its product excellence. Electronic House Magazine selected the OneHome Management and Control Solution as one of its Products of the Year for 2004. And TechLiving named the OneHome solution as one of the products on its 2004 HotLIST recognizing products that 'simplifying your life'.

Electronic House Product of the year

"Hundreds of entries are submitted—the editors of EH Publishing's four magazines that are dedicated to the connected home all choose their favorite products. It is a democratic voting process. And although it's fun, this has got to be one of our most difficult jobs." Stated Cindy Davis, Editor of Electronic House. "There are many products that deserve recognition, but we had to limit ourselves in order to fit the list into the magazine. Our decisions are based on reviews we ran throughout the year, product demos, and talking with the installers and users of the products. Topping our list of criteria is technological innovation, combined with overall value—and just plain outstanding features. You will see some products that might seem alike, but take a closer look for what we feel was the defining difference. We also want to make sure that the products mentioned are actually available. Therefore, the product must be available between September 2003, when many of the "next year's" models are launched, and September 2004. Get a red marker and circle your favorites—the holidays are just around the corner.

Primary reasons HomeLogic's OneHome System was chosen:

OneHome 2nd Generation Solution This home-control hardware and turnkey software solution integrates a variety of home subsystems. It provides a consistent, easy-to-learn graphical user interface that is accessed via in-wall or wireless touchscreens, PocketPCs, or any networked computer, even via the Internet. The system is also accessible through telephones. In addition, temperatures, door and window states and irrigation function histories are stored to provide information to the homeowner. Cool Because Security, climate, lighting, distributed audio, video, phone messaging, and irrigation systems can all be connected to this IP backbone.

Tech Living Hot List

"TechLiving screened thousand of products for the 2004 Hot List. We reviewed everything we had covered over the past year, and even got hundreds of new submissions from manufacturers," stated Rachel Cericola, editor-in-chief of TechLiving. "Then we put each product through a screening process. We checked on the release date [products needed to be released between January 1, 2004 and December 31, 2004]. But the most important thing was we asked ourselves 'Is this a TechLiving product?' After all, it should be something we'd cover in the magazine, and something that almost every single one of our readers would clamor for!" Cericola also explained that they looked at features, cost, ease of use and whether or not it was a truly unique item. "An exclusive group of only 50 products were chosen this year," Cericola also said. "HomeLogic's OneHome System was a must-have for the TechLiving 2004 Hot List."

"These awards are recognition of the significant research and development HomeLogic has conducted in creating a leading-edge solution for the integration of in-home electronics," stated HomeLogic co-founder Jim Herman. "We are honored to receive these awards from two of our industry's established periodicals and believe these represent our work to deliver an easy-to-learn, easy-to-install, and easy-to-use solution for home automation providing valuable home owner benefits."

HomeLogic was presented with the Electronic House Product of the Year at the recent CEDIA trade show in Indianapolis, ID. The TechLiving award will be featured in the upcoming November/December issue along with the other recipients of this year's awards.
