HomeLogic Delivers Home Theater Control with its OneHome® Solution

Marblehead, MA–September 9, 2005: HomeLogic adds home theater control to its broad line of entertainment and control solutions. The OneHome theater solution delivers the award winning OneHome user interface in a wide range of “home theater” installations, from basic family rooms with a flat screen and receiver controlled with a hand-held remote, up to high-end home theaters with lighting, climate and shades all controlled with a wireless touch screen.

“The integration of home theater is a significant addition to the OneHome solution,” stated Jim Herman, HomeLogic co-founder. “Homeowners can now manage their video and entertainment from any standard OneHome interface, including in-wall touch screens, wireless tablets and PocketPCs. In addition, we have developed the system to properly support IR, so customers can fully control the system with their favorite universal remote.”

At the core of the home theater solution is full two-way serial control of compatible receivers, which initially include models from Integra, B&K and Denon, with more to come shortly. Included with the system are standard templates for video sources, such as DVD players, TiVo®, Satellite boxes, and Cable TV, which can be easily customized to suit a particular installation. Full IR control is supported, with IR learning built-in and easily setup, in addition to support for power sensing and video sensing for displays and sources that do not have discrete IR codes.

“With the full compliment of home systems under the OneHome umbrella, homeowners can truly control more” says Joe Lautner, HomeLogic’s VP of Marketing and Sales. “Integrators can offer comprehensive and convenient entertainment control by integrating the theater with other systems, including whole house audio, security, climate and lighting, plus less common systems such as video surveillance, irrigation and a pool or spa.”
